Not illustrated. 1872 Excerpt: .for any excess of vigour induced by high feeding will develop the green portions of the leaf in so great a degree as to considerably lessen the richness of the variegation. All the ivies thrive in peat soils; but there cannot be a question that, if fine examples of the variegated sorts are required, peat is to be avoided, and a mixture should be prepared consisting of turfy loam of a light texture with a considerable admixture of old mortar or plaster broken small, with siftings of broken brick and other such debris. In any and every case they must be treated as hardy plants, and have the fullest exposure to the weather. Hence, if pot specimens are grown for decorating the conservatories during the winter, they must be allowed to make all their growth in the open air in a partially-shaded spot, and be taken into the house in autumn when the new wood is acquiring ripeness and the leaves are well coloured. Differences of aspect produce differences of colour, and the richest tones of red and bronze are best brought out by exposure to the north in a damp atmosphere. The lovely carmine bars and blotches on some of the silvery-leaved varieties, and the deep tints of chocolate, and purple, and bronze, that overspread many of the greenleaved kinds in autumn, are invariably richer when the plants are fully exposed than if in any material degree sheltered or shaded. But as shelter and shade...
