There has indeed been great discrepancy of opinion among modern writers with regard to the distance actually traversed, and the farthest point to which the navigators attained. Gossellin refused to believe that they advanced farther than Cape Noun (in 28 40 N. lat.);a but this view, though adopted by Walckenaer, 3 may be safely rejected as utterly untenable. It does not indeed satisfactorily explain or agree with any of the principal facts recorded, and is in fact based solely on the assumption that the ancients could not make voyages of any considerable length. Major Kennell on the contrary, in a very valuable and elaborate examination of the question, 5 came to the conclusion that the Southern Horn--the farthest point actually attained by the expedition--was identical with Sherboro Sound, just beyond Sierra Leone (in N....
