Not illustrated. 1853 Excerpt: .the beach, to see shipwrecks, thought, with many others, that the destruction generally attendant on such disasters was irremediable; but he was now thoroughly convinced that means might be devised to prevent such wholesale destruction of human life, within so short a distance from the shore. He recollected that he had, about the year 1783, tin own a line, by means of a small mortar, over Downham Church, in Norfolk; and it struck him that he might, by the same means, throw a line over a stranded vessel. After making many experiments, which proved unsuccessful, he obtained the use of a mortar from the Board of Ordnance; still he had to make numberless experiments before he could succeed in his object. The grand difficulty lay in connecting the shot securely with the rope: chains of every form were found liable to break on the discharge; but at length, stout strips of raw hide platted closely, answered the purpose. Repeated trials during high gales of wind gave him confidence in his plan, and he was now prepared to give proof of its utility. An, opportunity soon occurred. On the 12th February 1808, a brig ran aground about 150 yards from the shore. At daybreak the crew were seen in the utmost danger; they had lashed themselves in the rigging; it was blowing a hard gale from i.E., and the waves were breaking over hem. Many attempts were made to get a oat off to their assistance, but...
