Excerpt: . . . liberal help thereof Would you but pay thin thanks. Den. No, Ill no thanks; Yea, though I die, I will not thank you; no; For I can hold my breath into my lip, Or twist my hair to choke my throat upon, Or thrust a weak way thus to my rent heart Even with these bare and feeble fingers here, Making each nail a knife; look you, Ill dot. Ca. You talk too wide; I came to do you good. Den. That were good news indeed; things new, being good, Come keener to put relish in the lip; I pray you let me see this good i the face, Look in its eyes to find dead colours out, For deadly matters make up good for me. Ca. Nay, you shall find my favour large as love; I make no talk of gold, no costly words, No promise, but this merely will I say, You holding by me grapple to a hold Full of all gracious office and such wealth As love doth use for surety; such good riches As on these latter lips of womanhood Are sweet as early kisses of a mouth Scented like honey. Keep but fast my side, No time shall hew the planted root away That faith of your dear service sets in me, Nor violence of mistempered accident Cleave it across. Den. I would I were clear of you. What would you get You are a great queen, grave soul,...
